JANE KEEPS HOUSE IN WAR-TIME.

By Christine Terhune Herrick
Of The Vigilantes

(This is the second in a series of articles which Mrs. Herrick has written for the Vigilantes. Mrs. Herrick is the daughter of Marion Harland and is herself an authority on home economics. Among her books are: "Liberal Living upon Narrow Means," "First Aid to Housekeepers," "The A B C of Housekeeping," etc.)

II MEATS

Jane has no intention of confining her concentration on war-time economies to the first course at her dinner. She wished that man could live by soup alone, but she had associated with him too long to expect it. Meat he must have and it was up to her to buy the cheap kinds and persuade him by her skill in preparing them that he liked them as well as the more expensive cuts.

Not until she tried to carry out this scheme did she guess what difficulties awaited her.

"Cheap meat!" she said with fine scorn after her first interview with the butcher. "There ain't no such animals!"

Yet even here there were degrees of costliness. The knowledge that there is as much nutriment in the lower-priced pieces as in the higher sustained her in her experiments.

After a good deal of consideration she divided her methods of economy into two divisions. The first had to do with a casserole. When she had put a tough piece of the round of beef into the frying pan with a couple of slices of salt pork for which she had to pay by the pound a sum she would have thought lavish for capon in the old days, browned the meat in the fat and laid it in the casserole with a sliced onion, turnip and carrot and a stalk of celery she poured in two cups of cold water, covered the casserole closely and baked the meat steadily for three hours. Then she took it out, seasoned and thickened the gravy and served the dish to her family who ate it with a gusto and enthusiasm that made her almost regretful of the excellence of the product.

"If it hadn't been so good it would have lasted longer," she reflected as she gathered up the sparse remnants to convert into a mince.

But the enjoyment of the dish had been sufficient to encourage her to cook veal in the same way and even to subject an old and tough fowl to the discipline with results which were gratifying to the cook, although painful to the economist.

"I must find some way of making the meat go further without losing its flavor," she said. "If only I can fool them into thinking they are getting more than I am really giving them!"

In pursuit of this commendable form of deceit she made certain discoveries. One was that if she cooked meat and vegetables together in a casserole, first cutting the meat into small pieces, and then converted them into a pie with crust over the top and dumplings inside she could satisfy her family with half as much meat as was required for ordinary casserole cookery. Also a stew with dumplings—called sinkers by the irreverent—never failed to score a hit when the gravy was well seasoned. The value of seasoning Jane learned could not be overestimated as a means of cajoling the eaters into the belief that they were partaking of a choice dish. As vegetables grew plentiful she fed her family on Brunswick stew wherein chicken, veal or lamb were accompanied by lima beans, peas, parboiled potatoes, green corn and tomatoes, all cooked to a delicious consistency and seasoned so judiciously that one hardly knew where the meat ended and the cheaper vegetables began.

"Poor lambs! they really think they are eating meat!" Jane used to say to herself as she served her offspring a second help of vegetable masher and as anifal food.

When there was only a little of such stew left over she enclosed spoonful of it in biscuit dough and presented it as turnovers or meat dumplings or as small meat pies, and refrained from calling attention to the minimum of meat and the maximum of vegetables and pastry that composed them. If sometimes she caught her husband's quizzical glance fixed upon her when she referred to such a preparation as this as the "meat dish" she refused to recognize the implication.

"It does them no harm to go short on meat and it's a discipline that is good for anyone in war-time!" reflected Jane.

Called to Chimney Fire.

The chemical truck was called from the central fire station about 5:30 yesterday afternoon to extinguish a chimney blaze at No. 10 Oak street.

Universalist Church Notes.

On the Honor Roll of men enlisted in the great war from Universalist homes there have been placed the following names:

Captain Herbert A. Wilcox.
Truman W. Brown.
Benjamin F. Elliot.
Martin Herron.
Second Lieutenant Max D. Gillilan.
John M. Herron.
James F. Aldrich.
Carroll H. Poole.

The ladies of the church are to send Christmas boxes to the soldiers who have gone from the church. A bazaar with supper and entertainment will be held next week, Wednesday and Thursday.

The pastor and people are already beginning to plan for the celebration of the 50th anniversary of the church which occurs next January.

Red Cross Notes.

It has been suggested by Mrs. Alexander Dunnett that dried apples be brought to the Red Cross meetings at the Armory for the "boys" in France for Christmas. They are light in weight and something the boys would appreciate, as they cannot get them over there.

Skeleton Found Hanging on Tree.
Connelville, Pa., Nov. 13.—The skeleton of a man was found hanging from a limb of a tree in a thicket on the Keffner farm in Lower Tyrone township recently by Torrence Keffner. Evidently a suicide, the man had taken his life several months ago. No marks of identification were found on the body other than the inscription on his coat, "Joe Wilkins, May 19, 1917." A pocketbook containing $11 was found in a pocket of the trousers.

PERSHING INSURES.

His Application for $10,000 Makes $2,200,000 Asked by Men.

Washington, Nov. 13.—Gen. Pershing has bought his war insurance, his application for a maximum $10,000 policy bringing the total for members of the expeditionary force in France up to $2,200,000.

With his application, Gen. Pershing sent this message to Secretary McAdoo:

"The army in France is pleased at the announcement that the soldiers and sailors insurance bill is now a law. By this act our government has given its soldiers a privilege which no other country has ever granted. The very low rate and other advantages of this insurance are so manifest that it is hoped that every man in the army who needs insurance for those dependent upon him will avail himself of this generous offer. I have made application for insurance myself."

Letter From Major Alfred Arnold, Now in France

The following letter has been received by Lyndon Arnold from his son, Major Alfred Arnold, who is now stationed with the 26th Division United States Infantry now in France. The letter gives somewhat more information than usually gets through from the other side, although it is distinctly personal. The letter follows:

"France, October 21, 1917.

Dear Father:

Your letter of September 16 just received. I was not sent to the national army as all the senior captains were made temporary majors in the regular army and if the war lasts a few months I will get my permanent Majority.

"I have been for six months teaching school. A division was first established but on the 15th it became a corps school to teach all that has to be known now for this kind of trench warfare. It is a very big affair divided for all the different specialties.

"I am director of the musketry, bayonet and snipers' section. I came down first to take over the bayonet division with Colonel Maxey, but he has gone so now I have to look after the whole section.

"It is a big job, getting all the plant into shape and all the schools together and to handle a thousand students at a time. So you can see what it means. It requires a lot of work as we have to be right up to the minute on all that is going on and teach accordingly.

"It has been very cold and rainy most of the time for the past three weeks. It is a beastly climate here and they say it is so all winter long. We are out in it just the same, rain or shine, as the work has to go on.

You can see many pictures of the school, as the movies have been here and they will be shown in the United States."

"Must close now. A. C. ARNOLD.
